Santa Fe Community College Youth Media Project Summer Intensive

Santa Fe, NM, July 2, 2008 –An intensive two week seminar encompassing training in radio production, audio field recording, aural expression and studio engineering for youth between the ages of 15 to 25 starts July 21 at Santa Fe Community College.

The Youth Media Project Summer Intensive takes place on the SFCC campus and runs Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. In partnership with the college's Service-Learning Department, the Youth Media Project will help register participating youth into SFCC's HUDV 170 Volunteer Service, a service-learning course that provides students with two college credits upon completion. Scholarships are available and enrollment is limited to 20 participants.

Students who wish to continue in radio production can join the Youth Media Project where they will produce regular radio shows throughout the school year. To sign-up for the Summer Intensive, go to youthmediaproject.org or contact Judy Goldberg at (505) 986-1880.

The summer workshop's 70-hour course will include an introduction to media literacy and hands-on development in all aspects of radio production, including writing narratives, listening to radio pieces, critiquing, researching, field recording, interviewing, scriptwriting, oral delivery, dramatization, on-air hosting, panel discussion, studio engineering, digital editing and polishing radio pieces. Final projects will be posted on the Web and made available for distribution. The summer intensive concludes with presentations and a celebration of student work.

To apply for the Summer Intensive, go to youthmediaproject.org or contact Judy Goldberg at 505.986.1880.

About The Youth Media Project

The Youth Media Project (YMP) trains young people in the art of communication, the practice of community involvement, and the exercise of creative and journalistic voice. YMP produces regular radio shows for KSFR, Santa Fe Public Radio, on alternating Wednesday nights from 7 to 8 pm. Throughout the school year, YMP facilitates ongoing radio production teams, works in partnership with educators and students in classroom settings, and hosts after-school youth action teams and specialized workshops. Participants may receive stipends and high school and/or college credit for their work. YMP trains educators, develops curricula and broadcasts youth voice with students from Monte del Sol Charter School, Santa Fe High School's theater department, Santa Fe Indian School's spoken word club, Earth Care International – Youth Allies, Academy for the Classics and Technology, ENLACE/GEAR-UP, Santa Fe Public School's Student Wellness, and the Santa Fe Community College Media Arts and Service-Learning departments.
